Executives pay $2,500 for course

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Any college student who thinks he's overworked or overcharged might check the School for Environmental Management that James E. Terrill Jr. of Westinghouse Electric Corp. conducts.

Its students, mostly top business executives, have 100 hours of scheduled work per week. The cost for the two-week cram course is $2,500.

Many corporations, pressured by environmental groups and new government regulations at all levels, pay that hefty tuition fee so their executives can better cope with ecology problems. Terrill's course is the only one of its kind in the country.

The Westinghouse environmental specialist held his first course last summer at Colorado State University, Fort Collins, and 30 engineer-managers attended. It will be held this year at the same school from July 12 through July 23, and attorneys will join the engineer-manager group.

Hot pants add six weeks to prisoner's stay

LONDON (UPI)—A pair of hot pants has added six weeks to prisoner Leonard Denniston's stay in Wormwood Scrubs prison.

A judge Wednesday pronounced the sentence after Denniston, 25, admitted he tried to smuggle a pair of hot pants outside the jail, along with two cigarette lighters and a letter.

A prison spokesman said the hot pants are turned out by the prisoners from material supplied by a clothing manufacturer which pays them a set rate.

He said the hot pants are sold all over Britain.
